UNPRECEDENTED: Auxiliary Bishops Michael Pham and Felipe Pulido are ready to serve the diocese after their episcopal ordination on Sept. 28 at St. Thérèse of Carmel Church. For the first time, the diocese ordained two bishops at a time, one of them with roots in Vietnam. Now the diocese will have three auxiliary bishops, also a first.

Parishes Hosting Synod Dialogues

By Aida Bustos

“We should do this more often.”

That’s what many said after participating in small-group sessions at their parishes in the San Diego Diocese last year.

That’s precisely what the Catholic Church is asking all faithful to do, no matter their rank: Come together, listen to one another, and discern what God is “asking us to do at this moment,” as Cardinal Robert W. McElroy has said.

This process is at the heart of a synod that is occurring throughout October in the Diocese of San Diego and 6,000 miles away in Rome.

Locally, parishes and schools will be meeting again in small groups, this time focusing on the Eucharist. These dialogues once more will be held in English, Spanish and Vietnamese, and there will be special sessions at parishes and schools for youth.

The format will be the same as last year. Eight or so participants will sit around a circle, and take turns sharing their experiences, prompted by three questions, as the others listen. A note-taker will capture the key information, which will be summarized and submitted to the diocese. No one’s names will be recorded.

And just like last year, the diocese will analyze the information and share key findings with the community early next year. Pastors will receive a summary of what their community members said, as well.

Some pastors have begun to make changes at their parishes to respond to the concerns expressed by their community members in last year’s small-group sessions. He parish life that we had been missing.”

The Church’s goal is for parishes, schools, ministries and dioceses themselves to adopt this “synodal” process — infusing them with the energy of coming together — which over time will lead to their renewal.

Deacon Terry Hannify of St. Michael the Archangel Parish in Poway recently reflected on last year’s small-group sessions. He said that the idea of having to gather a large number of parishioners together as everyone was emerging from the pandemic seemed daunting.

“But that’s exactly what we needed and at a time when we truly needed it the most,” he said.

“We witnessed the power of the small-group process, bringing together of hundreds of people in small groups who ordinarily would not have done so.”

People from all walks came together to share their individual experiences, their frustrations and their hopes for the Church, he said.

“As a result, we saw connections and friendships that were being formed, or re-formed. All of which contributed to the reawakening of our Eucharistic parish life that we had been missing.”

Cardinal McElroy will be among the hundreds invited to participate in the synod being held in Rome from Oct. 4 to 29. They, too, will meet mostly in small groups to discuss the main synodal themes: synodality, communion, mission and participation.

On Sept. 13, the cardinal gathered the members of the diocesan synod commissions from San Diego and the Imperial Valley and the Pastoral Council to hear from them what concerns they would like raised in Rome.

VATICAN CITY — When Pope Francis was introduced to the world from the central balcony of St. Peter’s Basilica, he spoke to the crowd about taking up a journey, “bishop and people,” a “journey of fraternity, of love, of trust among us.”

He did not mention the Synod of Bishops in that greeting March 13, 2013, nor did he issue one of his now-frequent appeals to ensure a more “synodal Church.”

But the inspiration behind the assembly of the Synod of Bishops, which opens Oct. 4, can be seen in his very first words as pope and in his course-setting exhortation, “Evangeli Gaudium” (“The Joy of the Gospel”), which emphasized the responsibility of all the baptized for the life of the Church and, especially, its evangelizing mission.

Unlike earlier meetings of the Synod of Bishops, which focused on a specific issue or a specific region of the world, the “synod on synodality” is focused on the Church itself. Who belongs? How are leadership and authority exercised? How does the Church discern God’s call? How can it fulfill its mandate to share the Gospel with a changing world?

Members of the synod assembly are being asked to reflect on the characteristics they believe are essential for building a “synodal Church” by starting from what they heard from people who participated in the local, diocesan, national and continental listening sessions.

It’s not a synod on whether and how Catholic parishes can be more welcoming of LGBT Catholics, how it can recognize and encourage the leadership of women or how it can foster the involvement of young people — but those questions are part of the discussion about how to increase a sense of unity or communion, promote participation and strengthen the missionary outreach of the Church.

The questions, and dozens more, have come up repeatedly in the synod process, which began in October 2021 with parish and other local listening sessions and is scheduled to go through October 2024 with a second assembly at the Vatican.

Almost every time someone mentions the synod within earshot of the pope, Pope Francis insists “it’s not a parliament.”

And the pope and a preparatory commission have spent months working on ways to ensure the 378 full members of the synod (including Cardinal Robert W. McElroy), the eight special guests and 75 experts, facilitators and staff have an experience of “spiritual conversation.” The synod office describes this as intense, prayerful listening that pays attention at the same time to spiritual movements in oneself and in the other person.

Creating and protecting an environment where such conversations can take place — and where people truly are open to changing their minds — has been a matter of strategizing, planning and intense debate as advisers to the pope and the synod office also try to help the entire Catholic Church understand how the process is working and whether the hopes and concerns they shared early in the synod process were heard.

A regular rhythm of shared prayer — both publicly and among synod members only — is planned throughout the Oct. 4-29 synod assembly.

All the members of the synod — which include lay women and men for the first time — will spend three days together on retreat outside of Rome. They will return to the Vatican for the opening Mass of the synod Oct. 4 and will celebrate Mass together before beginning work on each main synod theme: synodality, communion, mission and participation.

Pope Francis told reporters in early September the synod would be “very open” with regular updates from the synod’s communication commission, but “it is necessary to safeguard the religiosity and safeguard the freedom of those who speak,” so apparently synod members will be asked not to share with reporters the contents of their own or other members’ remarks to the synod.

The notoriously stuffy atmosphere characterized by hours of speeches in the Vatican Synod Hall will disappear. The synod assembly will be held in the much larger Vatican audience hall with its rows of seats removed to make way for round tables to promote constant interactions.

More of the work will be conducted in small groups, organized by language and by the themes of interest to participants. The plenary sessions are designed for a general introduction of the various themes and for reporting the results of the small-group discussions. Members will not stay in the same small groups throughout the assembly but change when the themes they are working on change.

According to the working document, “the last segment of the work of the assembly will be dedicated to gathering the fruits of the process, that is, discerning the paths we will continue to walk together. The assembly will consider ways to continue reading the experience of the people of God, including through promoting the necessary in-depth theological and canonical studies in preparation for the second session of the synodal assembly in October 2024.”

Elizabeth Joseph was barricaded inside a room with fellow Catholic school educators on Aug. 2 when the gunshots started.

Once law enforcement gave them the all-clear to go outside, they saw the many wounded bodies sprawled on the ground and began what Joseph described as “the chilling process” of trying to stop their bleeding.

The guns that day were loaded with blanks. And the victims’ blood, which felt so real as it gushed over Joseph’s hands, was fake.

No one wants to imagine a scenario in which there is an active shooter on campus, or where the lives of seriously wounded students may depend on whether a faculty member knows how to apply a tourniquet properly.

But local Catholic school educators are forcing themselves to contemplate the unthinkable, all in the name of protecting the children entrusted to their care.

Three-member teams from 43 Catholic elementary schools are participating in the San Diego County Office of Education’s intensive, four-day Diamond Safety Team Training series, which puts them through intensely realistic simulations of crisis situations, equips them with practical threat-assessment strategies, and ultimately will help them to develop a comprehensive campus-safety plan.

Educators from local Catholic high schools also will have the opportunity to begin the training in October. “It’s better to be prepared and not need this training — and that is what we pray for every single day,” said Leticia Oseguera, diocesan superintendent of schools. “But we want to make sure that, should any type of situation arise, even if it’s minimal, that’s our leaders, our teachers feel confident, feel prepared.”

Tim Ware, coordinator of school safety and security services for the San Diego County Office of Education, said Diamond Safety Team Training was created about two and a half years ago and draws from two decades of learning from the successes and failures of others in responding to on-campus emergencies.

He said it bundles several of the individual trainings offered by the Office of Education, including those on threat assessment, active-shooter situations and bullying prevention, into one comprehensive package.

Diocesan educators attended their first day of training Aug. 1 on the campuses of St. Therese of Carmel Parish and neighboring Notre Dame Academy. About 140 people participated in the five-hour session, which introduced them to the Diamond Safety Team concept and trained them in how to proactively identify concerning behaviors on campus and de-escalate situations that could lead to violence.

That first day, participants were made to understand that “everybody has a piece of the puzzle when it comes to threat assessment” and that it isn’t immediately knowable whose piece will prove to be “the deciding factor” in preventing bloodshed, Ware said.

The day closed with a “walk-and-talk” training, during which participants were led through each step of law-enforcement’s response to an active-shooter event.

The second day was held Aug. 2 for one group of diocesan educators and Aug. 8 for a second group. Both took place at the Kearny Mesa-based Strategic Operations, Inc., a provider of what it describes as “Hyper-Realistic tactical training services” for law enforcement, first-responders, the military and others.

The day’s activities included an introductory “stop-the-bleed” course, as well as the opportunity to apply those techniques during an active-shooter training exercise that featured mannequins and professional actors in “cut suits” that would only stop bleeding if the necessary life-saving measures were performed correctly.

Participants also were trained in radio communication during emergencies and attended presentations by subject-matter experts on bullying prevention and how to identify drug paraphernalia and “ghost gun” parts if they turn up on campus.

Kyle Lara, a teacher at Sacred Heart School in Brawley, described the “stop-the-bleed” training as “a life-or-death, simulated situation of Universal Studios-caliber.”

For Elizabeth Joseph, principal of St. Francis of Assisi School in Vista, it was “intense.”

“The sights and sounds were very realistic,” she said, “and when I thought that this could be one of my students, my emotions moved from fear to strength. I would do anything to protect and save one of my students’ lives.”

Days 3 and 4 of the training are scheduled for Sept. 28 and Nov. 16, respectively, both at the diocesan Pastoral Center. The days’ agenda will include additional threat-assessment scenarios and provide school teams with the chance to work on improving their campus-safety plans in light of the lessons they’ve learned.

Oseguera said that the schools will receive a template, which they can modify for their campuses. She said there will be certain “essential elements” that all schools’ safety plans must include, along with other recommended items. Each school will form its own safety committee and will have a few months to complete its plan and submit it to the Office for Schools.

The Schools Office plans to develop school-safety guidelines that will become part of each school’s “yearly checklist” every summer, she said.

Through Ware, the schools also will be connected with the school resource officer responsible for their geographical area.

David Blair, vice principal and eighth-grade teacher at St. Charles School in Imperial Beach, reflected on his experience.

“The majority of the training has to do with prevention and the ability to come up with preemptive plans before the disaster happens,” he said, “and a lot of that has to do with building a culture of care and positivity.”

He noted that Catholic schools excel at the 80% of the training that focuses on creating such a culture, which reduces the likelihood of on-campus violence.

Active-shooter drills and the like represent the remaining 20%, which focuses on how to respond to such incidents if they occur.

After sharing his experience of one of those drills, he said, “Those experiences will stay with me forever, and the skills that I’ve learned will definitely transfer over.

To Joseph, said, “I am glad that our diocese is providing this outstanding training for all the schools. It is a true blessing for all of us.”
A humanitarian crisis is unfolding in the streets of San Diego and Imperial counties, sparked by a lack of funding and a spike in immigrants seeking asylum at the border.

Catholic Charities of San Diego continues to respond to this emergency, fulfilling its mission to welcome and help the stranger, as the Gospel calls all people of faith to do.

For more than two years, the organization has been helping immigrants who are legally in the country seeking asylum. Its staff has received them when immigration authorities released them, provided them with a warm bed, food, and medical care if needed, and assisted them to travel within a day or so to connect with family and friends elsewhere in the country.

The organization became the largest provider of assistance to asylum-seekers in Southern California, providing humanitarian and trauma-informed help in an efficient, economical way, said its chief executive officer, “Vino” Pajanor. The operation grew to three shelters in San Diego and Imperial counties, with the largest one having a capacity of 1,100 beds in San Diego.

In the last 28 months, the organization has helped more than 252,000 asylum-seekers from 131 countries, one-third of them families with children, the CEO said.

That all has changed.

Funding for operating the shelters has been drastically reduced by the federal government. The state of California, which has supported the shelters, is facing a budget deficit after several years of surplus.

At the same time, immigration authorities are seeing a high number of immigrants asking for asylum at the border. Immigration officials began to release hundreds of asylum-seekers a day in the streets of San Diego and Imperial counties, instead of taking them to shelters, which could no longer receive a high volume due to the budget cuts.

The migrants are being dropped off near transit centers in cities such as San Diego, Oceanside and Escondido. They generally only have the clothes on their backs and do not speak English. County and city officials fear they will join the thousands of people already living on the streets.

Catholic Charities will now focus on assisting vulnerable asylum-seekers, such as women with children, the elderly, or disabled. The agency has closed two of its shelters, leaving only one in Imperial County, which has 300 beds available, and one in San Diego with 550 beds.

The organization is coordinating with the U.S. Department of Homeland Security only to receive vulnerable asylum-seekers if there is a surge of migrants. If there is not, the agency will receive any other asylum-seeker needing assistance to connect with family or friends elsewhere in the country, up to its capacity.

“It’s not morally right for us to have open beds and migrants are being dropped off on the street,” said Pajanor.

The state government is handing off the operation of the shelters to nongovernmental organizations instead of running them itself. Catholic Charities will be the lead organization in Imperial County starting Sept. 13, and in San Diego County starting Oct. 1.

Meanwhile, the federal government continues to provide a small amount of funds to help the nonprofits assist the migrants, through FEMA.

Inundated with sensational headlines, Catholic Charities’ CEO wants the Catholic community to know the fundamentals.

“Everyone who comes into our care, released by the Department of Homeland Security, is a documented individual,” he said. “These migrants are legally in the country.”

He said that these individuals crossed the border and turned themselves in to immigration officials. After processing them, the U.S. officials decided that they could be eligible for asylum. They gave the immigrants a notice to appear in immigration court, and transported them to Catholic Charities shelters. Nearly all will leave within 36 hours, assisted by the organization, to connect with loved ones and to press their case for asylum.

HUMANITARIAN RESPONSE: Catholic Charities of San Diego continues to help immigrants legally in the country seeking asylum, particularly the most vulnerable populations.

The Chaldean Church has been embraced by the Roman Catholic Church since the late 19th century. Chaldeans were among the first to embrace the Gospel to St. Thomas the Apostle's evangelization efforts in India. During the preceding centuries, Chaldeans were among the first to receive the Holy Spirit at Pentecost, the Good News of salvation.

Nearly 12,000 people turned out during the Sept. 16-17 weekend for the 11th annual Chaldean American Festival, hosted by the Knights of Columbus at Hillsdale Middle School.

Chaldean tradition traces their origin back to非常喜欢圣玛尔定的传教士们向印度传达福音的努力。在前一个世纪中，他们还是在印度最先受到圣保禄五旬圣灵的洗礼。

在圣迭戈县，圣彼得大教堂和教区的圣多明各圣殿，以及阿波利纳里圣殿和圣约瑟夫圣殿，总共接纳了大约5万家庭。教区的教务长法雷德·沙巴说。

当我们在圣多明各教区成立时，我们接受了耶稣的使徒们所传的福音，法雷德·沙巴说，他担任了圣多明各圣殿的牧师，该圣殿是塞德克教区的主教座堂。

而在圣多明各圣殿，该圣殿是塞德克教区的主教座堂，和圣多明各圣殿的牧师们，以及圣约瑟夫圣殿的牧师们，都代表了近5000个家庭。

Chaldean Catholic Bishop Emanuel Hana Shaleta explained that many Chaldean Catholic families also attend Mass at non-Chaldean Catholic churches across San Diego County.

Festival Continues on Page 8
“because we are not closed; we are an open people.”

Bishop Shaleta said that, at St. Peter Cathedral, all are welcome to attend Masses that follow the Eastern Chaldean Catholic rite in Aramaic, the language spoken by Jesus and His apostles, as well as Masses celebrated in Arabic and English.

Christian persecution drove Chaldean families to migrate to the United States in large numbers during the second half of the 20th century. The migration process dispersed the flock, causing families to live in “silos.”

The Chaldean festival has had the opposite effect.

“What the festival does is break that wall. (It) brings us all back together, like we were before,” said Father Shaeba. “This (event) ties us back to our original roots in Iraq because, in Iraq, we were a very close unit.”

During the weekend, the Chaldean community transformed Hillsdale Middle School into a vibrant hub for families. The festival featured an array of cultural activities, delicious Chaldean food, live music and spirited dances.

At almost 100 tents, local businesses shared information about their services, as well as goodies for festival-goers’ enjoyment. Families with young children and teens flocked to rides and games, including pony rides, which were a favorite among little ones.

“This festival is bigger than ever — more booths, more vendors, more people. The kids’ area is double the size that it was last year,” said Paul Batta, main sponsor of this year’s festival. “The community (is) coming together to celebrate each other.”

Almost 12,000 people attended this year’s festival, said Steve Mattia, lead organizer of the festival and a 16-year member of the Knights of Columbus.

“It is very rewarding to see our community come together,” he said. “As a Catholic organization, everyone is (at the festival) to serve a purpose, to serve God, and to serve our community. The community comes together and organizes it.”

As a first-time attendee, Francis Tupas appreciated how “family-friendly” the festival was.

“I like that there are plenty of things for all walks of life to do,” he said. Proceeds from the festival are used not only to support St. Peter Cathedral’s projects, but also to help other Chaldean Catholic churches in the county, he said.

Bishop Shaleta thanked the Knights of Columbus, volunteers, vendors and sponsors who contributed to the festival. After stressing that this event is for all communities countywide, he offered a blessing.

“May the Lord bless all of you who came and participated in this event. In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit, now and forever.”

“Amen,” responded the enthusiastic crowd.

The home parishes of San Diego's two new auxiliary bishops shared in the joy of their ordination.

Shortly before their Sept. 28 episcopal ordination, Cardinal Robert W. McElroy publicly received the Profession of Faith and Oath of Fidelity from Bishops-elect Michael Pham and Felipe Pulido.

Bishop-elect Pulido made his profession and took his oath Sept. 10 during a Mass at St. Joseph Parish in Kennewick, Wash. Bishop-elect Pham did the same Sept. 17 at Good Shepherd Parish in Mira Mesa.

With the profession, the men attested that they “believe and profess all the truths contained in the symbol of faith.” The oath includes a promise to “always be faithful to the Catholic Church (and) the Roman Pontiff.”

Bringing Touch of Ordination Home

BLOSSOMING: The congregation of Good Shepherd Church, Bishop-elect Michael Pham’s parish, gave him a warm send-off at a Mass on Sept. 17. Members of the Vietnamese Eucharistic Youth Movement presented a special dance during the service, which included his Profession of Faith and Oath of Fidelity.

“This is a day of great joy for all of us — and you can see it in the hearts of Bishop Pulido and Bishop Pham.”

That’s how Cardinal Robert W. McElroy ended the historic episcopal ordination of Fathers Michael Pham and Felipe Pulido at St. Thérèse of Carmel Church on Sept. 28.

The ordination made history at the diocese: It was the first time that two auxiliary bishops were ordained at once, the first time that three auxiliaries will serve at the same time, and the first time one of them is Vietnamese.

The new auxiliary bishops — along with Auxiliary Bishop Ramón Bejarano — will assist the cardinal with confirmations, liturgies and pastoral administration. In addition, Bishop Bejarano will serve as Vicar for Ethnic and Intercultural Communities; Bishop Pham will be Vicar for Clergy; and Bishop Pulido will take on the newly created position of Vicar for Parish Pastoral Initiatives.

Each newly ordained bishop addressed the assembly.

Bishop Pham, 56, said that he felt the same “tremendous honor and privilege” that he did on the day that he was ordained to the priesthood.

“God’s grace is overflowing upon me today,” he said. “I forever praise the Lord for such a tremendous gift. Thank you, everyone, for helping me to be an instrument of God’s saving grace.”

He quipped that he and the two other auxiliary bishops are “the new Three Amigos.”

For his part, Bishop Pulido, 53, said, “On this day of my episcopal ordination, in this beautiful church, I present myself to you — poor and weak, but with so much joy in my heart.”

“I’m most grateful for the presence of so many faithful Catholics from here...
A total of 31 (arch) bishops prayerfully laid their hands upon Bishops-elect Felipe Pulido and Michael Pham at their ordination Mass. Among them was Melissa Nguyen, one of Bishop Pham’s sisters, and her husband, Tuan. They are active members of Good Shepherd Parish in Miramar, where Bishop Pham previously served as pastor.

Nguyen said she felt as if she were “on Cloud Nine.” Of her brother, she said, “He’s always ready to be there to help and answer to God.”

In his homily, Cardinal McElroy spoke directly to the new bishops.

“To be a good bishop,” he advised them, “you must truly journey with God’s flock as Pope Francis has urged us: walking sometimes at the front to lead; walking sometimes in the middle of the flock to experience the realities of daily life; and walking sometimes at the rear to embrace and walk with those who are struggling to keep up.”

The cardinal reminded Pham and Pulido that they had been “called to be bishops at this pivotal synodal moment in the life of the Church” — a reference to the worldwide consultation of the faithful that is currently underway and the style of Church governance that it represents.

Cardinal McElroy continued, “We seek to build a Church that is discerning and prayerful, dedicated to the treasury of Catholic faith, collaborative and inclusive, humble and forthright, evangelizing the cultures of our world while reaching out to all those on the margins, and especially to the young, who are drifting away from the life of the Church.”

He added that the two new bishops “must become prophets of the synodal Church that is dawning and the renewal to which we have been called.”
Father Joe's Enhances Job-Seeking, Storytelling

The Southern Cross

A revamped job-skills program and a grant-supported playwriting project are among exciting recent developments at Father Joe’s Villages, San Diego’s largest homeless-services provider.

On Sept. 15, the Father Joe’s Villages Employment & Education Services (EES) program moved to a new location at St. Teresa of Calcutta Villa and was renamed Gene Burkard Employment and Education Services. The program helps San Diego homeless find and keep jobs.

A ribbon-cutting ceremony was held at the center’s new location at 1 1/4th St. in downtown San Diego.

Because loss of income is the primary driver of homelessness in California, Father Joe’s Villages is expanding its resources to help more people find long-term jobs. The move to St. Teresa of Calcutta Villa will complete an expansion that kicked off earlier this year when EES hired three additional staff members to support the program that now has more resources and a larger space to operate.

The new name honors the generosity of the late Gene Burkard, whose multi-million-dollar support helped expand the program and will sustain its services for years to come.

Father Joe’s Villages also has been awarded a $25,000 grant from the Humanities For All grant awards for a playwriting project called “Stories of CREED in Action.”

“Stories of CREED in Action” will offer two playwriting residencies to Father Joe’s Villages’ clients in partnership with the San Diego-based nonprofit organization Playwrights Project.

Frank Kensaku Saragosa, a recipient of the PEN Literary Award who has lived experience with homelessness, will be leading the playwriting workshops.

Public performances of the plays will be held at the Morgan Auditorium, in partnership with San Diego Central Library, from June 14 to 16, 2024.

The playwriting workshops will allow people with lived experience to share their stories and the public to get a glimpse of the circumstances they’ve overcome.

The Humanities For All Project Grant is a competitive grant program of California Humanities which supports locally-developed projects that respond to the needs, interests and concerns of Californians, provide accessible learning experiences for the public, and promote understanding among our state’s diverse population.

“It is Father Joe’s Villages’ mission to prevent and end homelessness one life at a time in the spirit of Compassion, Respect, Empathy, Empowerment and Dignity (CREED),” said Father Joe’s Villages Project Director Aleta Barthell. “By sharing these stories with the community in ‘Stories of CREED in Action,’ the hope is to recognize and acknowledge the humanity that is at stake in our current homelessness crisis.”

Father Joe’s Villages also has been housed at St. Teresa of Calcutta Villa since Sept. 15.

FINDING WORK: Gene Burkard Employment and Education Services, a job-skills program of Father Joe’s Villages, has been housed at St. Teresa of Calcutta Villa since Sept. 15.

Teachers of Faith Receive Cardinal’s Blessing

As in past years, two liturgical celebrations were held — one for catechists in San Diego County and another for their counterparts in the Imperial Valley. Auxiliary Bishop Ramón Bejarano celebrated the first of the Masses on Sept. 8 at the diocesan Pastoral Center. Cardinal Robert W. McElroy presided over the other, which was held Sept. 11 at Sacred Heart Church in Brawley (pictured).

More than 200 people attended the Mass in San Diego, while the liturgy in Brawley drew about 70.

During each of the Masses, the catechists in attendance received a blessing from the presiding bishop.
Walking with Our Shadow

When we walk on a sunny day at the park, we notice that a dark figure accompanies us. Our shadow that moves with us.

We are beings of light. Today, advanced 3-D technology allows us to see the flash of light that occurs in the moment when a human sperm cell makes contact with an egg. It’s the equivalent of the “Big Bang” at the origin of our life.

Our existence begins with an encounter that ignites a spark of light. However, in the course of our life’s journey, we become aware that shadows accompany our light, dark dimensions that make us uncomfortable, that hurt us and can even hurt others.

Light and shadow appear inseparable, and it would seem a lifelong task to recognize them, accept them, and even embrace them to live in harmony with oneself and with those around us.

In the world of psychology, Karl Gustav Jung has tried to understand this complicated aspect of our personality.

How do we recognize or begin to explore the reality of our shadows? We can ask ourselves in our honest conscience: What part of me would be an embarrassment if others knew about it? The answer could give us a clue about our shadows, the dimensions that we keep hidden, that we repress or don’t accept.

To illustrate this: If a man acts as a mediator or peacemaker, and others appreciate this conduct, it’s like his luminous being is in action. But how would fellow community members feel if they knew about his violent dimension at home?

We should not be afraid of these realizations, even though they can be painful to acknowledge and even provoke a crisis. Crises give us the opportunity to grow, they humanize us, help put our feet on the ground and open us up to heaven through faith in our origin and our destiny.

“Until you make the unconscious conscious, it will direct your life and you will call it fate,” Jung wrote.

That is to say, what remains repressed or hidden, gains such a psychical force that it drags our lives and conduct toward where we do not want to go, precisely toward what we have decided to hide.

All you have to do is attend an Alcoholic Anonymous meeting to witness what happens when a brother acknowledges that he is an alcoholic, that he needs help from God and from his fellow brothers and sisters to overcome his addiction.

Alcoholics feel liberated because what they are not; feel the vulnerability to maintain an image of what we’re not; and humility that gives us authorship and strengthens the connections in our relationships.

And the possible results? A greater harmony with oneself, since internal struggles diminish; an increase in interior peace, as less energy is required to maintain an image of what we’re not; and humility that gives us authority and strengthens the connections in our relationships.

We should not be afraid! We are a mysterious project of God fully under construction.

In 1979, Pope John Paul II, the first to coin the term “ecological conversion,” named St. Francis of Assisi the patron saint of ecology and of those who promote ecology.

According to the Ecological Society of America, ecology is “the study of the relationships between living organisms, including humans, and their physical environment; it seeks to understand the vital connections between plants and animals and the world … and how we can use Earth’s resources in ways that leave the environment healthy for future generations.”

While St. Francis is dearly loved as the patron of animals, this new title integrates all the workings of creation and directs us to see in the humble life of this saint a model by which to live, within this world and with each other.

A Canticle as Model for Just Living

The word “canticle” comes from the Latin “canticulum,” meaning a “little song.” St. Francis of Assisi was not a prolific writer in comparison to other saints. He composed his “Canticle of the Creatures” toward the end of his life, summing up his observation of God’s goodness in all things and demonstrating a response of praise to this revelation through each and every thing. He characterizes a right relationship with all of creation as sibling-like in nature — Brother Sun, Sister Moon, Brother Wind, Sister Water … In this light, everyone and everything are interconnected as one, big family.

A Channel of Peace

St. Francis’ “Canticle” goes on to reveal and praise the peacemaking earthly interactions of pardon, forbearance, suffering and love. He rejected the violent, yet en vogue lifestyle of soldiering in exchange for a life of outreach to the marginalized. He extended what Pope Francis calls a “culture of encounter” to the Sultan of Palestine, Syria and Egypt, al-Malik al-Kamil, during the Fifth Crusade. Though unsuccessful in converting the Muslim leader, he was invited to stay for a week of dialogue and exchange. Later, when the Sultan was in a position to flood the Nile and drown the Christian forces, he mercifully resisted, asked them to lay down their weapons, and granted their escape. No other crusade ended in such a way.

A Spirit of Poverty

St. Francis’ life of simplicity, fostered by his resistance to the possession of things, coupled with his love of the life-giving natural world, provides a guide for our use of the Earth’s resources and preservation of the Earth for our descendants. Such an integral ecology calls for us to steward social and environmental policies in solidarity with our sisters and brothers around the world, the creatures of our planet and future generations.

Trees, Peace and All Goodness

In celebration of our Patron of Ecology, the diocese’s Creation Care Ministry invites all to a family-friendly event on Sunday, Oct. 8, from 1 to 3 p.m., at the Pastoral Center. We will be hosting several organizations providing environmental education and activities. At 2 p.m., we will bless the trees to be distributed to the parishes and schools that have requested them. If you are interested in receiving any extra trees, please indicate in the registration form, at https://bit.ly/FOSF23 or available via QR scan. This event is free, but we are requesting registration to help with planning. Contact Christina Slentz at cslentz@sdcatholic.org with questions!
‘Nefarious’ Is Thriller with Catholic Heart

By Denis Grasska

A psychiatrist is called in to conduct a last-minute psychological evaluation of a condemned prisoner who, mere hours before his scheduled execution, is claiming to be a demon.

Is he insane? Is it a ploy to evade the death penalty? Or is something supernatural at work?

That’s the premise behind “Nefarious,” a gripping, 98-minute thriller that debuted in theaters last April and is now available on DVD and Blu-ray, as well as on streaming services.

Though the film’s promotional materials might suggest that it’s yet another schlocky exorcism flick, and its trailer plays up the horror elements of the story, appearances can be deceiving.

“Do not be thrown off by the poster, and do not be thrown off by the trailer,” advises Catholic filmmaker Cary Solomon, who co-wrote, co-directed and co-produced the movie with Chuck Konzelman. The latter is a fellow Catholic with whom he also co-wrote the first two films in the “God’s Not Dead” series.

In an Aug. 2 interview with The Southern Cross, Solomon explained that the poster and trailer were designed to “lure in” 15- to 29-year-olds who are “obsessed” with demonic horror movies, but who are unlikely to buy a ticket to an overtly Christian film.

“We figured that, if we could bring them in, we could flip them to rightness, to the light,” said Solomon, who compared the film to C.S. Lewis’ epistolary novel “The Screwtape Letters,” in which an experienced devil mentors a novice demon in the art of tempting.

Inspired by talk-radio host Steve Deace’s novel “A Nefarious Plot,” the film doesn’t contain the sort of satanic imagery, gore or scares that one might expect from a film in this genre.

Solomon noted that the film has received kudos from respected Church figures, including the exorcist Father Carlos Martins, and some have told him that it’s “the best film on possession” they’ve ever seen.

“The hot-button issues of abortion and euthanasia come up during the intense dialogue, giving audiences the opportunity to see them from a demon’s perspective,” Solomon said.

In another memorable scene, a priest who serves as a prison chaplain stops by to make himself available to the prisoner, who reacts in abject terror to the priest’s appearance.

“We wanted to show the power and authority of the Catholic Church and how powerful a priest is,” said Solomon, who noted that this is “the only time the demon literally jumps out of his chair, pulls the chains as far back as he can and goes into a defensive posture.”

But within a few moments, the priest “cedes his authority,” revealing himself to be a modernist who considers demonic possession a relic of the past.

“He is a holy fool, a man of great faith, a man consider his filmmaking to be a corrected insertion. Requests for adjustments must be made within 30 days of ad publication. The film’s set-up is simple. In fact, for much of its runtime, it’s little more than two men sitting across a table from one another — one, a death-row inmate played by Sean Patrick Flanery in a mesmerizing performance; the other, an atheistic psychiatrist portrayed by Jordan Belfi — engaged in a conversation that covers a lot of theological ground.

But that conversation is absorbing.

Solomon shared that people who “can’t sit still for 90 seconds” have told him that they “never once fidgeted” while watching the film and were “riveted” throughout.

To Solomon, the film is a modern-day battle for the soul.

“Trained voices were heard,” said Solomon, “and it was being ceded by that foolish priest rather than to preach in a foreign country where his life might be in danger.”

Solomon said that he and Konzelman consider their filmmaking to be a form of ministry.

“In our way, we’re preaching the Gospel,” he said, adding that he feels fortunate to be called to make movies rather than to preach in a foreign country where his life might be in danger.

“I’ve got a latte and air-conditioning when I’m doing it,” he said. “The Apostles certainly had a harder job than we did, but we’re preaching the Gospel through the media.”

OUT OF THIS WORLD: This artist’s rendering shows the Osiris-Rex spacecraft descending toward asteroid Bennu to collect a sample of the asteroid’s surface. It was due to drop its cargo on Earth Sept. 24, 2023.

Vatican Astronomer Helps NASA in Historic Mission to Study Asteroid

VATICAN CITY — Jesuit Brother Bob Macke, a Vatican astronomer and meteorite expert, has built a custom device for studying material from the first U.S. mission to collect a sample from an asteroid.

The unmanned spacecraft, Osiris-Rex was launched in 2016 to collect samples on the near-Earth asteroid, Bennu. After collecting about a cup of material in 2020, the spacecraft was due to release its cargo to send the sample back to Earth Sept. 24, before continuing its space voyage to orbit the Sun.

Because of Brother Macke’s known expertise in the field, Andrew Ryan, the lead of the mission’s sample analysis working group, asked him if he could build the device needed to analyze the density and porosity of the samples to help identify the mysterious rocks on the asteroid’s surface, according to Mashable.com Sept. 16.

NASA had strict requirements for this device, called a pycnometer, and the companies Ryan contacted were only willing to sell what they had in stock, not do a custom build, he told Mashable.

Brother Macke, however, was game and he posted his progress and success with a number of videos on his YouTube channel, Macke MakerSpace. He said he built it in five weeks with the help of students at the University of Arizona, which collaborates with the Vatican Observatory’s advanced technology telescope in Tucson.

Pope Francis Names Bishop for Mexicali

After an 18-month vacancy, the Catholic community of Mexicali will have a new shepherd.

Pope Francis named Msgr. Enrique Sánchez Martínez the city’s fourth bishop, according to an announcement by the Vatican on Sept. 11.

“We unite in joy and prayers with the pilgrim Church of the Diocese of Mexicali and wish Msgr. Enrique a productive tenure in the new Episcopate assignment the Lord has entrusted to him,” said the announcement published in L’Osservatore Romano.

Mexicali, about 120 miles from the city of San Diego, is just across the border from Calexico. It’s the capital city of Baja California and has a population of about 1.1 million people.

The consecration Mass for Bishop-elect Sánchez Martínez will be Tuesday, Nov. 7, at 6 p.m. in the city’s cathedral, according to the homepage of the website of the Archdiocese of Tijuana, which includes Mexicali in its province.

Tijuana Archbishop Francisco Moreno Barrón issued a statement inviting the entire community of Mexicali to form a human chain from the rectory building of the Autonomous University of Baja California to the cathedral, giving their new pastoral leader a warm welcome.

Msgr. Sánchez Martínez is well versed in border life. Since 2016, he has served as the bishop of Nuevo Laredo, across the border from the Texas city of Laredo.

He was ordained a priest on June 29, 1986, for the Archdiocese of Durango, where he held various leadership positions before his appointment to Nuevo Laredo. He will turn 63 in December.

In Mexicali, he will take over the post of the late Bishop José Isidro Guerrero Macías, who died at age 70 from COVID in February of 2022. He had led the diocese for 26 years.

For his part, Tijuana Archbishop Moreno Barrón was diagnosed with cancer in April, had surgery in May, and received chemotherapy. He recently said that his health is stable and that he is returning to his normal activities.
The 40 Days for Life campaign is an effort undertaken on the same dates in almost every diocese in the world, including the Annual Lenten Collection and collections for World Mission Sunday and the Retirement Fund for Religious. Other special collections, such as the one for Ukraine, are held as needed in response to natural and man-made disasters.

‘40 Days for Life’ Now Underway

The fall campaign of 40 Days for Life runs from Sept. 27 to Nov. 5. Undertaken on the same dates in communities around the world, the 40 Days for Life campaign is an effort to protect the unborn through prayer and fasting, community outreach, and peaceful all-day vigils in front of abortion clinics.

The centerpiece of the campaign is a 40-day, round-the-clock prayer vigil on the public sidewalk outside of an abortion clinic. Locally, such vigils will be taking place at several locations, including downtown San Diego, Kearny Mesa, Mira Mesa, Chula Vista, El Cajon, Escondido and Vista. For more information or to sign up for vigil hours, visit sdcatolic.org/event/40-days-for-life-campaign.

San Diego Catholics Generously Supported Ukraine

The Diocese of San Diego responded to the Russian invasion of Ukraine with a one-time special collection for the Church in Ukraine.

Local Catholics donated a total of $750,570.11 between March and December of 2022.

Six special collections are taken up every year in the Diocese of San Diego, including the Annual Lenten Collection and collections for World Mission Sunday and the Retirement Fund for Religious. Other special collections, such as the one for Ukraine, are held as needed in response to natural and man-made disasters.

Eucharistic Saint

Blessed Bartolo Longo (1841-1926) was a priest in a satanic cult in his youth. He credits the Virgin Mary and a zealous priest for saving him from the darkness. Afterward, he dedicated himself to promoting devotion to Mary through the Holy Rosary.

It is believed that Blessed Bartolo composed the Luminous Mysteries of the Rosary, the fifth of which is the institution of the Eucharist.

Back to Basics

SPIRITUAL COMMUNION: There are many reasons why people cannot receive the Lord sacramentally in Holy Communion, and we are cautioned by St. Paul against receiving the Body and Blood of Christ unworthily (1 Cor 11:27).

The Eucharist, however, is the full of light that, even if we cannot receive Him sacramentally, we can still receive the grace of the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass through an act of spiritual communion. According to our Catechism, the Eucharist actually keeps the Church — and our souls — in existence:

“The Eucharist is the efficacious sign and sublime cause of that communion in the divine life and that unity of the People of God by which the Church is kept in being.” (CCC, 1325)

Disposition of Heart — Receiving grace, sacramental or otherwise, is entirely a question of how open our heart is to God’s action. The Parable of the Sower (Matt 13:23) says we can receive thirty-, sixty-, or a hundred-fold.

Practice — Even if someone cannot go to Communion for whatever reason, we can always encourage that person to go to Mass. An immense treasury of grace overflows at every Mass like a river of light into the hearts of those who are disposed to receive it.

St. Peter of Alcantara used a glorious image for spiritual communion: “Our Lord in the Blessed Sacrament has His hands full of graces, and He is ready to bestow them on anyone who asks for them.” All that is necessary for us is to visit Him... and ask!
